A Sam Jones Story.

Sam Jones told the following story in a meeting at A'lanta, (is, during the excitement over the prohibition question:

"There was a married couple with half a dezen children and only one bed. The whole family elept in that hed-and they were so thick one couldn't turn over unless ell did. So when anybody got tired sleeping on one side he'd say 'turn!' and over the whole family went. They got so used to it that even when they heard the word 'tnrn' in their sleep they would hustle over. One day the old man was fishing on a log bridge over the river. The eun was hot and the fish was not biting, and he fell ssleep balanced on a log. One of the boye saw him and thought he wonid try a joke, and halfoed out 'turn!' and over the old man went kerflop into the water. Now I want the temperance men to halloe 'Turn!' until the anti-men who ere asleep on the bridge over the prohibition river will hear it and drop ln."

Gilbooly dropped into the office of Judge l'ennybunker a few days ago. After they had talked about local politics, the weather etc. Judge Pennybunker remarked:

'You come to see me very frequently, Gilbooly, but there's one thing about your visite that I can't understand."

"What le that?"

"Well, it is the fact that you have never yet invited me to call on you."

"That's easily explained," said Gilbeoly, and then gracefully settled down in a heap yawning and stretching himself; "you ece when I come to visit you, if you make me tired with your talk I can get up and go. I'tl be hanged! I'll be hanged if it waan't but If you call on me at my house and bore the most graceful thing in the booke—the me with your talk, I may not be able to lead and date for Jalier of Lincoln county, subject to the action of the Democratic party. prettiral, aweetest, dantiest fall ever seen get rid of you without being impolife. IT ought to be a plain proposition to every sensible man that If the Board of Commissioners of the Pententiary is to be held responsible for its conduct, it should have the appointment of the warden. Strange for the election of that officer by the Legisisture, which rarely regards fitness as a requisite. Though it has not the right of appointment, the Board can ralieve the warden, and it dld when it found Capt. South thoroughly natitted for the position both as a disciplinarian and as a manager of such an institution. It had reached such a condition of filthiness that it was frequently epoken of as the "Black Hole of Calcutta" and was in avery way a shame and reproach to the State. The Board secured Capt. E. H. Taylor as warden and in a short time there was a complate change in the piace, and at presen', everything considered, it is as neatly kept as any institu tion of the kind in the country. The most sceptical have only to visit the place to be convinced that the Board acted right in making the change. The Legislature mistake, a sad mistake, which, if not corshould therefore ignore Capt. South's pe- rected soon would break up the democratic tition for a reinstatement and pass tha law party. He said that of all the offices under suggested by Gov. Knott giving the Board the Government, two sevenths were in tha the power to appoint as well as dismise a hands of the democrate and hive-seventus warden.

SPEAKER CARLISLE has at last announced his committees. They number 48 and it is no easy job to place 325 members on them so as to please them and at the same time arrange the committees for expeditious and proper isgislation. The chairmen of the most important are: Morrison, ways and means; Randall, appropriations, (this committee has been shorn of the most of its power by new rules recently adopted;) Bland, coinage, weights and measures; Willis, rivers, and harbore; Beimont, foreign affaire; Herbert, naval; Cobb, public lands; Turner, elections; Reagan, commerce; Tucker, judiciary; Curtin, banking and currency; Hatch, agriculture; Bragg, post officee; Wise, manufacturee; O'Nalll, labor; Eldridge, pensione, Springer, ciaime; Cox, civil service. Kentucky gets three chairmanshipe: Willis, rivers and harbors; Roberteon, expenditures in war department; Haisell, private land claims. Gov. Mc-Creary la on two important committees, sion committee.

He is a clever gentleman and a capable cierk and we are glad that the State will have so competent a man in its service.

THE Stanford JOURNAL this week pub lishes a picture and sketch of the life of Col. E. Polk Johnson. The picture, however is a base libel on our handsome and suave Colonel .- [Louisville Times. It was indeed a miserable carricature and we were really vexed when it looked even worse in the paper than in proof. The photograph from which it it was made was a small and poor one and the cat was the second at tampt at it by the engraver:

The fairy tales of tremendous and well organizad opposition to Dr. Woods and the Courier Journal Job Printing Company for re-election as l'ublic l'rinter, which our esleamed contemporaries the Commercial and Past bave been narrating, have not come true. Dr. Woods was nominated without surprise of infinite space, where the orbs of the planetary system had stopped mov ing for two weeks to see how things would come out. The wishes of our estremed contemporaries seem to have been father to their news on this subject. Dr. Woods is a clever, honest genileman, who deserves endorsement, and se for the Courier Journal Job Prioting Company, his backer, it posecces the largest facilities for printing in the South .- [ Louisville Times.

The Paducah News expresses our senti ments exactly. It says:

"One long, strong prayer for the whipplng-post is necessary all over the land to overcome the mawkish sentiment of modern Kentucky solons. Louisville reports a man beating his wife with a chair and leaves her insensible upon the floor. Now, Mr. Legislator, what onght to be done with that wretch? Has he not lost honor, shame, humanity? How are such brutes to be moved, restraiged or punished? A man who beats his wife is so lost to all respect for himself as to require that of no one sense is to be found find a skin susceptible to the lash "

While the salary of the Circuit Judges in this State at $2 400 per annum is low enough, there is an abuse connected with this office that the Legislature ought to put a stop to. We allude to the pay of protem. Judges. As the law now is a Circuit Judge may preside over his courts only half of his time, draw his $2,400 and the State be required to pay $1,200 additional for the pro tem. Judges. There is no reason why this should be so. The State considers $2,100 as sufficient compensation to hold all the courts in each Judicial idistrict and right at that amount the draft on the Tressury for that purpose should stop. The pro tem. Judges should be paid by the Circuit Julges thannelves .- [Eizheth. town News

"A garden aceds a great deel of watchin' and tendin'," sald haadsoma Widow Maxsy, and tendin, said handsoms widow maxsy, sitting on her perch, in the cool of the day. And then she closed har lips so tightly that they seemed to come together with a snap. When she spoke again, it was in a softer tone. "Won't you come in and rest yourself a while, elder, and let mis pick you a

"You know I never could say no to you," sald Elder Whitwell, with a little laugh, as he opened the gate. The Wldow Maxey know very well that Eliza Farris and tar sister, Ahby Ana, were watching, from behind their closed blinds, across the etreet, and there was a touch of color on her cheekbones, and a little air of defiance about her as she went about gathering the bunch of plaks with a bit of southernwood—the elder called it boys' love—in the center. People might wonder that she, the richest widow in the county, well-preserved and handsome, should condescend to be courted by Eider Whitweil, a maa worn and rusty in mind as well as in outward appearance, broken and old before his time by years of hard-ship and poverty—for the elder was not gifted in prayer or preaching; he was not stirring," and could not draw crowds, and the congregation over which he had been placed hed made haste to exchange him for a liverlier dispenser of the Word. But she, him-she would be proud. The fact was, that people were thinking and saying very different things from what she supposed. Outsiders, proverbielly, see most of the game. Abby Ann Ferris et this moment, saying to her sister that "it took an old woman like that" (Mrs. Maxey was 43) "to make berself ridiculous," and she "wondered if the elder really had any intentions." And Angelina, Mrs. Mexey's own "help," had been theard to whisper darkly that it was her belief that the elder was "a coquetta." Every letter of the word got its full Yankee vaine in Angelina's

Rachel Maxey made the posy as she knew the elder liked it, and she felt like a girl as she did it; as she never had feit since the day Caddy Tamson-little, homely, sickly Caddy Timson, the shoemaker's daughterhad told her that she and Ezra Whitwell were in love with each other. She had had begniled Ezra to his raia, for he needed mother. money and infinence; he was not strong in nor one to make his own way in the world, at best. It was true; why shouldn't she have told Coddy so, if she were willing to so far sacrifice her pride? And Caddy had understood; she had wept, bitterly, and declared that she would not be a burden and a hinterance to Ezra. Nevertheless, she had married him before the month was cut. She had come and explained timidly to Rachei that Ezra would have it so, Rachel had woudered many times since that she had been able to restrain the fury that fortunate that, from the day when he asked unless she welcomes me." her to marry him to that last day when he lay upon his bed giving her precise diractions about the manngement of the property, and assuring her that his arrangements for the next world were made with the same prudence that had characterized him by this, he had never asked her if she love! For herself, she had almost forgotten that there was such an emotion which sometimes played havoe with the practical af fairs of life. Her prile hal been gratified, and had grown by what it fed on. Nobody had over crossed her desire but little feeble Caddy Timson.

Affairs had gone with Caddy and her husband just as Rachel had prophesied. Sho was ailing, "slack," helpless. One never heard naything from the family but pov erty and hardship, as they went about from place to place wherever Ezra was sent to mialater the Word. What a different wife she would have made him, end what a dif-ferent woman she would have been if she had been ills wifel she said to herself, con sclous of the hardening process that was go ing on within her, year after year, and hold ing Caddy Whitwell strictly accountable for it. She called herself a religious woman but she hated Caddy Whitwell.

fler strong affection for her only son had more of the element of pride than of tender. ness in it. She rejulced for his sake that the wealth her father had left to her had double I and tretled in her tu-band's shrewd hands; she rejoiced in his brilliant ability and his numbition; even in the great crowded city to which he had gone he was distinguishing himself; she expected to see hlm a great statesman lie had gained ar entrance into the higest social circles; wher he married, he would without doubt increase his wealth and influence. All this was a great gratification to her, but when people had a ked her how she could bear to be separated from him, she had realized. wonderingly, that she did not care much tint. She might be strange and coil, tut she dld not deceive her there was only one person in the world whose companioushlp was necessary to her happiness. Caddy Tim-on had robbed her of that companionship, But Caddy was in her grave, and Ezra Whitwei had come back to her. That was why she felt like a girl as she gathered the elder's nosegay. She could feel his eyes upon her in the dusk, and her color burned. Of what was he thinking-of what their lives might have been if Caddy Timson had never come between them! She had always suspected that be had sacrificed himself and her from pity for Caddy. Now, when his eyes met hers, she could not doubt it. Of what was the spell formed that bound ber to blm She speculated upon it. Love belouged-or was supposed to belong-to youth, but this feeling was stronger than anything that youth could grasp or hold.

A simple-minied man, even a little duland slow-going; if he had come into het life for the first time now, would be have made any Impression? How much oi a hak in the chain that bound her was hat exultant sease of triumph over Caddy1-Caddy who lay la her quiet grave, thrust colde (as she had thrust her), forgotten! The Willow Maxey was not a woman to deceive herself. She recognized, she did not even attempt to crush, this sense of triumph; but she knew that without it, and in spite of her sober middle age, and whal everybody had called her cold heart, the love that she felt for this man was like the loved harnsome things, dearly. She wanted breath of her nostrils, as much a part of herself, no more under her control. How ridiculous Elizi Ferris and her eister Abby She'd got kind of childish then, bein' so Aan would have thought It! They said il was "just like a middle-aged widow to be setting her cap for a minister; "it would never nave occurred to them as a possibility that the Widow Maxey could be in love.

shocked or disgusted hlm! She gave him the pink pay with downcast eyes. (Abby Ann Ferris, behind the bilid, giggled outright.) Then she sat down at some distance from him, where the hop-vine partially screened her fece from his view.

"How the amell of pinks does corry me back to the time when I was young? said the elder, pensively. "Wa were young together, Rachel—you and I—and Caddy." That unme was like a kalfe-thrust to har; but it fell from his lips like an after-

"Sumetimes it don't seem any more'n yesterday, and yet we've both got children grown. My little Caddy is most 19."

The Widow Maxey caught har breath sharply. That was one of the disagreeabla facts of life which she permitted herself to forget, or at least to ignore—the fect that Caddy Whitwell had left a daughter; an insignificant, dail, pale little thing like her-self. She had gone away somewhere to live with some distant relative, and work in a milliner's shop. It would be just as wall that she should stay away, the widow thought; she hoped the elder would not have any foolish ideas about it.

"I had a letter from her the other day, and she tells ma that your Herman came across her, by accident, and comes to see her frequently. It would make things pleasant to have them friends," said tho der, softly. For a moment it seemed to the Widow Maxey as if the solid ground were falling beneath her. The odor of the pinks was overpowering. She had an odd seasation of listealag to something in a dream. Her son and Caddy Whitwell's daughter! Nobody could think of such a thing seriously!

Of course the elder had meant nothing more thnn friends, she thought, when she was feirly herseif again. But yet his tone was significant, and his eyes had been fixed upon ber face; she actually had not dered to mest them; her own drooped under them as

Must she make such a sacrifice of her pride as thisi "I didn't even kaow that Herman had Rachel Maxey, would not be ashamed of aver seen her," she said, a trifle coldly.

She knew afterward, that it had been coldly said, by the coastraint that fell between them. "I hope, indeed, they may be friends," she added, and she would have given worlds to take the chili out of her voice.

The eider talked persistently of other things, and she could not return to the subject. He went away earlier than his custom, and the Widow Maxey wrote a letter to her son before she slapt.

> Mrs. Maxey sat on the porch again in the flower-scented twilight. She had not seen the elder for nearly a week; to-ulght be would be sure to come. Happines, which she had never kaowu, was aimout within her grasp. She had paid a price for it! She had written a cordial assent to Herman's proposal marriage. She had even written, at first, that his bride should be the doughter of her heart, but she had torn that letter up. Caddy Whitwell's daughter could never be that, and she would not say it; bu she had said that she should be welcome. She had felt as if she were sacrificing her son; Caldy would be just such a wife as her mother had been.

"Hut he is like me; he would never get over lt," she had said to herseif. "Heaven help proud and cold-hearted people!" The elder waited for an invitation, with his hand on the gate, as he always did: Rachei Maxey's voice shook as she gave lt. Some time passel before the could summon sufficient composure to tell her news. The eider was ill at ease to-night, and there were long silences. Angelina, with her ear at the keyhoie ciese behind the elder's back, aimost lest her patience, and afterwards confided to the solitude of her chamber that her knees "felt as if she'd been to a protracted rucetin'.

When at last the whlow spoke of the coming marriage of their children, the gathering durkness hid her face, but there was a thrill of joy in her voice; she had forgotten overything but the bond of sympathy that it create I between them!

The elder took her hand in his. "I was 'most afraid to hope 'twould be so, I didn't s'pose you'd think 'twas a tittin' match for him. A Feasibl Plan to Secure Lectures.

The Corrrent Eikhart, Ind., has a lecture association which might serve as a model for associatious is towns where lecture courses are not readily supported. The plan of the association is mutual, and the business in done gratuitously by the committee. Ail the money received from the sale of tickets is expended for entertainments of a high order and for lectures. Last year the sale of tickets aggregated over $1,97), and all but $2) was laid out securing eleves first class engagements. The sale of seats and tickets is advertised at particular places oa a certain day just before the season opens, and the price is governed by the location of the seat in the opera house, the highest price being $2.50 for the season, and the lowest $1.50. Last year the average cost for each eutertainment was from 14 to 23 cents per ticket.

The plan ensures success, because the committee can govera its axpenditures by receipts, and the sum obtained by the sale of such a large number of tickets will purchase lecture, and concerts of a high order. The present is the eighth year of the operation of the plan, and it has grown inore popular each year. The entire seating capacity of the opera house was taxed inst winter, and the sale of tickets stopped only when all seats had been selected. The number sold was 1,000, and 200 were disappointed in being unable to secure seats. The pian seems feasible in any city of 5,000 in-habitants, and would be found an educational forms of no small value.

Personal Appearances.

[New York 1 or, Chleago Journal] What is in personal appearance thopu-iarly, a great iteal. I went to the Grand Contrai depot with a young woman to meet her father on his return from New Havea; where he had been attending the l'rotestant Episcopal congress. He alighted from the train along with such religiously heavy men as Bishop Littlejohn and the Roy, Dra. ileber Newton, Howard Crosby and Morgan Dix. Probably those four wouldn't have weighed 500 pounds aitogether, but think of the ponderosity of their worth; Just as ey stepped on the piatform at one side t passengers from a western train alighted at the other. Fourteen big, burly, healthy fellows overtopped and belittle the clergymen by coatrast. My compeaion had only the hastiest of perfunctory kimes for her reverend father, because she was all eyes for the wonderfully fine-looking chaps.
"Did they come in your train?" she askad of him. "Were they in the congressi Are they delegatest Perhaps they are divinity students or volunteers for the foreign misslonary service."

"They are none of those," I was compelled to explain; "they are the New York Base Bail club returned from Chleago." "Well, all I've got to say is that if they were rectors," the girl remarked, "the'd te sure of fashionable congregations."

Mexican Justice.

iGalveston (Tex.) News.1 If the Maxicans do not extradite their criminals they aumetimes do better. They bava the peculiar humor to try them some times for crimes committed in the United States. A nurderar who committed a crime upoa a fellow Mexican in Texas has just been convicted at Piedras Negras and given ifteen years in the penitentiary at Saltiflo. It is just po aible that the Mexicans think our folks are too uncertain about convicting murderers.
